DOMESTIC CHILD SEX TRAFFICKING AND BLACK GIRLS

WHAT IS DOMESTIC CHILD SEX TRAFFICKING?
Domestic Child Sex Trafficking (DCST)—also known as “domestic minor sex trafficking,” “survival sex,” “child prostitution,” and “juvenile prostitution”—is the exchange of anything of value (e.g., food, shelter or money) for sex with a person under 18.\(^i\)

RISK FACTORS
Childhood trauma and instability make children more vulnerable to being trafficked. Risk factors for domestic child sex trafficking include, but are not limited to\(^ii\):
- Being between the ages of 12 and 14
- Having a history of sexual and physical abuse
- Community and family instability and dislocation
- Poverty
- Being female
- Being a runaway or homeless youth
- History of child protective services and/or foster care involvement

BLACK GIRLS ARE DISPROPORTIONATELY AT-RISK
Black girls are more likely to experience the risk factors listed above. Studies report that black girls become trafficked at younger ages than their racial counterparts.\(^iii\) They are more likely to experience poverty, and consequently more likely to be disconnected from schools and other community supports.\(^iv\) Black girls experience physical and sexual abuse at young ages\(^v\) and witness and experience multiple forms of violence at higher rates than their white peers.\(^vi\) In 2012, 26% of children in the foster care system were black.\(^vii\)

THE MAJORITY OF VICTIMS OF DCST ARE BLACK GIRLS
According to the FBI, black children comprise 52% of all juvenile prostitution arrests—more than any other racial group.\(^viii\) In a two-year review of all suspected human trafficking incidents, 40% of victims of sex trafficking were black.\(^ix\) In Los Angeles County, 92% of girls in the juvenile justice system identified as trafficking victims were black. Sixty-two percent of those children were from the child-welfare system and 84% were from poor communities in the southeastern part of LA County.\(^x\) In Alameda County, California, 66% of all youth referred to a community agency exclusively serving CSEC were black.\(^xi\)

CHILD PROTECTIVE SERVICES CANNOT INTERVENE
Because children are not always trafficked by a family member or legal guardian, child protective services (CPS) cannot always respond to reports of child sex trafficking. Without CPS as a resource, and in the absence of formal protocols mandating a child welfare response to child sex trafficking, law enforcement officers often respond by arresting child victims for prostitution. Black victims of domestic minor sex trafficking are much more likely to be arrested on prostitution charges\(^xii\), leaving them more vulnerable to re-traumatization in the juvenile and criminal justice systems, subject to the consequences of having an arrest and juvenile record, and deprived of appropriate intervention and treatment services.
As defined in the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, DCST is the “recruitment, harboring, transportation, provision, obtaining, patronizing, or soliciting of a person for the purpose of a commercial sex act” where the victim is a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident under the age of 18. 22 U.S.C. §§ 7102(9)-(10). A commercial sex act is defined as “any sex act on account of which anything of value is given to or received by any person.” § 7102(4).

viii Federal Bureau of Investigation, Crime in the United States 2014, Table 43B.

x Los Angeles Times, “Campaign to halt sex trafficking launched in L.A. County” (May 31, 2012).
